DERELICTS RESCUED BY SALVATION ARMY

Requests Gifts of Old Papers, Magazines and Clothing.

The social sphere in which the Salvation army was born made it necessary at the outset to undertake relief measures. One of these measures resulted in the Industrial Home for Men. The man without work and without home, applying for help, is given nothing gratuitously, unless from hunger or from illness he is unable to work.

The Industrial Home at El Pennsylvania avenue northwest, can house fifty men, at the present time some thirty-four are given work. The maintenance of such an institution requires a large sum of money. The waste material collected, assorted, repaired or baled, is sold—the waste paper to the mills and the repaired clothing and household goods to the poor. This is the sole source from which the maintenance funds of the Industrial Home is supplied.

Some wonderful conversions have taken place in the Salvation Army Industrial Homes all over the country. Many husbands have been resulted with their wives and young men have been sent back to their parents. That it is possible for a community to save too much money and that the movement for a national thrift club in this country to advocate universal saving was impractical and unwise was the statement of Prof. Robert Russ Kern, of the Department of Economics and Sociology, of George Washington University, before the Washington Chapter of the American Banking Institute at 1214 F street northwest, Thursday night.

"An excess in savings means a decrease in the volume of business, since people cannot spend money and save it at the same time," he said. "A decrease in the volume of business means less money and less pressure on the banks for loans, and the ultimate consumer feels the effect in higher prices."

Prof. Kern declared that he did not believe the European countries would ever be able to meet the I. O. U.'s that have been so liberally floated in the United States since the beginning of the war.

He stated that 30,000,000 workers are in the consumption demands and needs of this country and that there is mo use fer the goods of the sountry. The Kaiser Replies But Does Not Answer

President Wilson's note. It is the belief of the New York Times that Count von Bernstorff stands quite alone in this country in his view that Germany's note should be regarded "as constituting an acceptance of everything suggested by President Wilson in his note to the bellegerent nations of Europe." On the other hand the New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung affirms that Berlin's reply marks "a further step on the right road," and that "Germany has taken up her position completely on the same ground as President Wilson" in planning for the prevention of future wars.

The Allies say they want restitution, reparation, and guarantees of future security. Germany's reply to the President's note states a desire for "an immediate meeting of delegates" before terms are disclosed. This injects a new point of friction. Shall the delegates meet first, or terms be stated first? Is Germany sincerely working for peace, or cleverly avoiding the President's request?
